The Proposed Railway Line Hence to Jefferson, Texas, Would, if Built, Render Memphis the Queen City of the Great Southwest-Be Up and Doing.

Some of the Advantages of a Great Transcontinental Route of which this Road is the Missing Link-An Air-Line from New York to the Pacific.

Jefferson (Texas) Democrat: Under the head of "Transcontinental," the New York Bullion, of January 3d, publishes the sub-joined interesting and forcible article. Comjoined interesting and forcible article. Coming from the source it does, it ought to stimulate our Memphis friends to prompt action. In addition to the considerations presented in it, Memphis should not overlook the fact that railroad construction in Texas is moving with a rapidity never before witnessed in this country, and that within five years this great State, an empire within itself, will be checkered with those great agencies of commerce and civilization—a commerce such as the world never saw, and a civilization that will surpass the dream of the idealist. Only a span is to be filled—a less number of miles than St. Louis, unaided, has built in Texas within a year—to make Memphis the grand imperial city of the south. Why stand her leading men all the day idle? Why has it been that, while her noble journals, and those of Jefferson, have piped, they have not responded to the music. Says the Bullion:

"The transcontinental lines are attracted toward the Pacific by the prospective development of the great and growing trade of the Oriental nations. It is a well-known fact in commercial history that this trade has enriched every nation that has obtained control of it. The line of railroad, then, connecting the great Atlantic States with that point on the great Atlantic States with that point of the Pacific coast that will give the shortest ra and the nearest water connection with the East India trade will clearly be the mos East India trade will clearly be the most profitable and the best patronized. Will any of the lines now being constructed answer to this description? We have only to take a map of the United States, together with its Territories and Mexico, and draw a line from Boston and New York through Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Lynchburg, Virginia; Bristol, Knoxville, Tennessee, and Memphis, and on through Arkansas to a connection at Jefferson, Texas, to connect with the Texas and Pacific and the Texas International railroads, thence along the line of the Texas International to Austin and Sam Antonio, crossing the Rio Grande at or a short distance below Eagle Pass, continuing thence in a direct southwesterly line to Mazatlan, on the Gulf of California. We shall find that this is the shortest route to the Pacific, deviating the shortest route to the Pacific, deviating very slightly from an air line. There are very slightly from an air line. There are already 1300 miles of road built on this almost direct line. The companies manifestly destined to take the initiative in this great railroad enterprise of constructing the shortest route between these two oceans, are the Louisville and Nashville and the Virginia and Tennessee Air-Line from Norfolk to Memphis. These lines are now land-locked at Memphis and debarred from the commercial advantages of Arkanass and the great empire of Texas. It is not to be presumed that the companies owning these two great that the companies owning these two great lines, and controlling, as they do, about 3000 miles of road already in perfect operation, will permit the trade of that immense section of country to be carried away from them to St. Louis or elsewhere for the sake of building a cheap line of 300 miles between Memphi and Jefferson, Texas, to connect with the Texas International, thus affording them facilities for connecting with other roads in Texas, including the Texas Pacific, which is PREMATURE DECLINE, ETC. the Louisville and Nashville railroad company equally as direct a line from New York to Memphis by way of Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburg and the Pennsylvania railroad. The great influence of the latter might also be combined with the others in the consolidation to establish the route to Mazatlan. The chief advantages of this transcontinuental line may be summarized as follows:

"First—It would be the shortest possible roll line between the Atlantic members of the latter might also be combined with the others in the consolidation to establish the route to Mazatlan. The chief advantages of this transcontinuental line may be summarized as follows:

"First—It would be the shortest possible roll line between the Atlantic members of the Liver; Dyspepsia; Flatulence, and all Wastles Diseases; Weakness and Trembling or two simbs, and we weakness and Trembling or two simbs, and we were all the constructions. stacle in the way of this great transcontinental to Mazatlan.
